Bali, at times referred to as the "Island of the Gods," is an island and province in Indonesia. Bali is one of over 17,000 islands that make up Indonesia! With its five major islands and 30 smaller groups of islands, Indonesia is the largest archipelago in the world. The capital city of Bali is Denpasar. The name Denpasar comes from the Balinese words "den", meaning north, and "pasar" meaning market. This helps us understand the city's origins as a market-town and major contributor to Bali's economy through the exchange of local art and handcrafted goods.

An archipelago is a group of islands. Do you know any other archipelagos? Japan and the United Kingdom are both archipelagos!

The island of Bali is in Southeast Asia, just south of the equator, and it has a tropical climate. This is perfect weather for delicious fruit to grow, and Bali has many types of fruit to offer! Pineapple, grapefruit, mango, banana, and coconut are just a few to start the list.
